

PERRY JOHNSTON

Perry was raised in Virginia where he taught high school for four years and then another two years teaching in Bogota, Colombia. He subsequently earned a doctorate in planning and research and taught administration, policy and planning at three universities for a total of 34 years. During eighteen of those years he worked with state legislators in developing policy seminars for legislators and state officials around issues concerning public and higher education and social services. Since his retirement in 2003, Perry has engaged in a number of projects sponsored by the City of Key West and public interest entities.
