Historic Bight marketing efforts go live

BY SCOTT UNGER
Key West Citizen

Adept is entering the final year of a three-year contract (although there are options for two additional years) with the city that pays the group approximately $80,000 annually to "generate marketing, communications, and advertising for the Key West Historic Seaport," according to the contract.

Key West residents and visitors have another angle to view the city with the launch of a new webcam showing the historic Bight seaport from atop the Conch Republic Seafood Company.

The live streaming camera, launched on Jan. 3, is the latest effort to draw more visitors to the Bight by contracted marketing team Adept Strategy and Public Relations.

and Managing Partner Dana Pollitt. The webcam, which was initially suggested by members of the Key West Bight Preservation Association, provides a glimpse of Key West for visitors longing for a return trip, Pollitt said.

"Lots of visitors like to picture themselves in Key West and put it up on their desktops at the offices," he said. "If you can't afford to travel right now...you can zoom in on a live web cam."

Hughes said the new cam allows visitors to count down the days until they return by watching live events in the city.

"The new live webcam drops you right in the middle of the magic of Key West; experiencing our sunsets, world-class dining, shopping, live music, accommodations, museums and water excursions," Hughes said.

The camera is currently pointed at the harbor, showing a docked
