2Q20 Equity Commentary

The second quarter of 2020 will be remembered for unprecedented events that saw the US in the continuing grips of a pandemic, social upheaval, protests, and the beginning of a recession. The bear market that was entered in March lasted a mere 4 weeks. There has never been a bear market associated with a recession that lasted such a short time. As unsettling as the events have been, the market managed to rebound strongly from the near 20% drop in Q1, and posted a gain of 20.5% for Q2, making it the best quarter since 1998. In the midst of such uncertainty, dire unemployment, and GDP numbers, we are frequently asked how can this be? The simple answer is that money has flooded into the system from both the Fed and Congress. The Fed came to the rescue by pumping roughly $2.8 trillion of liquidity into the economy from mid March to the end of June. Congress has passed three different measures that have added another $3 T through various programs such as Paycheck Protection, expanded unemployment insurance benefits, and cash relief payments. The combined efforts amount to almost 23% of US GDP! And if that isn't enough, the House is working on another $3 T (The HEROES Act). The goal of all this money is to provide a bridge of support until the economy can fully re-open, which most likely means help is needed until an effective vaccine can be produced. The current unemployment rate is 11.1%, as a surprising 4.8 million jobs were added back in June. However, the U6 unemployment rate, which includes part time workers seeking full time employment as well as discouraged workers no longer seeking jobs, is at 18% for June. While improving, these numbers are ugly, and the fortunes of the economy moving forward will depend on how quickly these displaced workers can return to the payrolls.

GDP for Q1 2020 contracted at a 5% rate, but did not capture the impacts of Covid 19 for the full quarter. The Q2 will bear the brunt of the shutdown, and the Fed's GDP Now model is forecasting a decline of 39.5%. GDP for 2020 will probably be down between 5 – 8%.

What can we expect in the months ahead? The pandemic is highly uncertain, and companies have withdrawn earnings guidance. As a result, forecasts are more nebulous than ever. What is certain is that the Covid 19 curve will drive the outcome, either good or bad. We believe that it is highly unlikely that a total shutdown of the economy will occur again. The damage it imposes is simply too great. If the curve flattens we will see the economy continue to reopen, with jobs returning and consumer confidence improving. If not, more American's will choose to shelter in place on their own, and the economy will struggle to regain its footing until an effective therapeutic is found or a vaccine is developed. The back half of 2020 is likely to be volatile as these events unfold, and as each data point is scrutinized to ascertain if it means the economy is recovering in a V (best case scenario with a quick move up), U (stays down longer before moving up), or W (up and down, up and down). We think the odds of a V recovery are slim, but do continue to hold that there is a finite timeline to the end of this situation. The market has moved positively on news of vaccine advances, but we tend to believe that a more likely timeframe for mass production and inoculation of a large portion of the population is probably a spring 2021 event.

2Q20 Equity Commentary

Second Quarter Market Recap: The S&P return of just over 20% in the quarter was driven by the Technology and Consumer Discretionary components of the index. Amazon, Microsoft, Apple, Google, and Facebook now comprise almost 22% of the S&P. Consumer Discretionary was the top performing sector for the quarter gaining 32.9% (driven by Amazon +41%), and Technology was the second best performing group adding 30.5%. There was a clear cyclical tilt to performance in Q2 as both Energy and Materials posted respective returns of 30.5% and 26% as commodity prices recovered, with oil bouncing off its lows and gaining over 90% for the quarter. As you would expect in a “risk on” market environment, the more defensive sectors such as Consumer Staples and Utilities lagged returning 8.1% and 2.7%. The Tech sector is up 15% YTD, and Consumer Discretionary is up 7.2%. Every other sector of the market is negative for the year, indicating the very narrow breadth of the market. For the first half of 2020 the S&P returned -3.1% including dividends. The outsized returns that Tech has generated in 2020 has created great disparity in returns. For instance, while the S&P is down just over 3% YTD, the equal weighted S&P (each company held in the same proportion) is down 10.8%. Perhaps nowhere is the impact of the Tech dominance more widely seen than in the spread of performance between the Growth and Value styles. Year to date the Large Cap Growth Index is up 9.8% (highly tech weighted), while the Large Cap Value Index is down 16.2% (heavily weighted in Financials and Cyclical). Whether or not this can continue is one of the toughest calls that investment managers are having to make. With their strong balance sheets and ability to accommodate the “work from home” environment that has developed in the era of Covid, a number of tech companies have become “all weather” holdings, exhibiting the ability to thrive in almost any scenario. However, in every recession over the past 40 years, value stocks have led the market coming out of the recession. We should soon know if this time is going to be different.

Outlook: In the current environment it’s difficult to be anything but cautious with the level of uncertainty in the global economy. While we are all glad that the market has recovered, we must admit that it’s uncomfortable that the market is only 7% below its all time high given the elevated unemployment and contraction in GDP. The Fed has simply answered the bell and indicated they will provide liquidity as needed, and the market has viewed the Fed as providing a backstop to the market. As a result, even though we would view upside on the market as limited from this level, we also don’t expect a significant drawdown. If the next move in the market is down, it would likely be triggered by earnings reports and outlooks that are worse than expected. However, we doubt strongly that the market lows of March would be retested in any pullback. It’s fairly safe though to say that volatility will continue. And yes, there is money on the sidelines as many investors are holding some cash. . Yet today, money market assets represent just 20.5% of the capitalization of the S&P, well below the levels of money market assets in the Great Recession, and after the Tech Bubble, when money market assets represented 63.7% and 31.3% of the S&P market cap. This level of cash is unlikely to drive the market higher.

2Q20 Equity Commentary

In addition, individual investors have continued to on balance take money out of stocks and put it into bond funds. The next major move in the equity market will likely be driven by investors rotating out of bonds and into stocks. The money supply is growing at a 20% plus rate year over year, indicative of the Fed easy money policy, yet the velocity of money is plummeting, making it difficult for those funds to spur growth. So, while the bull case sees the Fed and fiscal stimulus as bridging the gap until the economy can fully reopen, the bears view it as simply plugging a hole in the dam that will eventually burst. None of us has a crystal ball, but we will be monitoring the weekly initial unemployment claims and the monthly jobs numbers as perhaps our best indicators as to where we may be headed. The reason for this is simple – the US economy is 70% consumer driven. If people have jobs they spend money, and GDP expands. If not, consumption slows and savings rates increase to provide the cushion to weather the storm. And while it may only be July, the market will start to discount the 2020 election at some point in the third quarter. Potential changes in tax rates and economic policy will begin to be factored into their impacts on earnings in 2021 and beyond.

Valuation: As we said in last quarter's report, valuation is tough when you really don't know what earnings will be. That has not changed any in the last three months. The number of companies willing to offer earnings guidance is half the norm. Just since March 31st, estimated S&P earnings for Q2 have been cut by 36.6%.

This is the largest quarterly decrease in estimates since Factset began tracking the data in 2002, and the worst since the Q4 of 2008. Q2 eps is now expected to be down 43.9% from Q2 of 2019. Full year 2020 earnings are forecasted to decline 21.6%, and this is down from a projected decline of just 3.4% as of March 31st. The second quarter should mark the low point for earnings this cycle, as Q3 is projected at -25.4%, and Q4 at -12.8%. The market should get back on track with positive earnings in 2021, as Q1 2021 is currently expected to show an increase of 12.6%, and full year 2021 eps should grow almost 29% coming off a depressed 2020. The current 12 month forward price earnings ratio for the market is 21.7X, versus the 5 year average of 16.9X, and the 25 year average of 16.4X. On a price to cash flow basis the market is selling at 14.9X cash flow versus the 25 year average of 10.6X. We all understand that earnings are depressed for 2020 due to the shutdown of the economy for a portion of the year. In that context, we must discount 2020, and look ahead to a more normalized 2021. The challenge for the rest of this year will be to determine how much, or how little, the damage of 2020 will impact companies profit statements moving forward. Navigating the markets is never easy, and the next several quarters could be challenging. We will continue to focus our efforts on identifying and owning companies that have the financial metrics to withstand the vagaries of the economic cycle, and can position themselves to compete effectively with their competition.

2Q20 Equity Commentary

It's quite an understatement to say that this has been a strange year for everyone. But, first and foremost, we hope that you will continue to stay safe and healthy. Always remember that we are here to serve you, and to answer any questions or concerns that you may have. Again, thank you for your trust, and reach out to us if we can assist you in any way.

2Q20 Large Cap Value Equity Commentary

Second quarter portfolio performance was in line with the advance in the benchmark off the February lows. Recalling our commentary during the first quarter, we were busy rotating the portfolio out of the more defensive names and into those that would benefit from the anticipated bounce. Looking back, we should have been more aggressive in our positioning, targeting companies that were not necessarily statistically cheap, but rather more sensitive to extreme fed stimulus. Extreme underweighting in Consumer Staples, Utilities and Real Estate sectors proved fruitful, but was offset by over weights in Consumer Discretionary, Industrials and Info Tech, that were strategically correct, yet tactically lagged in the names chosen by the model. Examples in the Consumer Discretionary Sector include Las Vegas Sands, Ford and GM, each of which failed to rally in the quarter despite attractive valuation and future outlook. Same story in the Industrial Sector where defense names like Northrop Grumman, Raytheon and Honeywell remained depressed during an explosive quarter for the benchmarks.

The disparity in performance between the growth and value benchmarks has been spoken about in these quarterly pages ad nauseum. Nonetheless, the annual rebalancing of the Russell benchmarks was noteworthy for the extreme positioning resulting from the performance gap. Looking forward into the rest of 2020, Technology has risen to 9.94% of the index from 6.2% during the first half. Companies like Google, Twitter and Zillow have been put into the Russell Value index's Telecom Services Sector. Starbucks (P/E 28.7) is now a "value" Consumer Discretionary company. Quantitative processes like ours are indifferent to the individual choices periodically moved into or out of our indexes, but at this writing the value index is 839 names diversified across 11 economic sectors versus the growth index that is now only 435 stocks. This outcome is explained by thinking about the performance chart printed here:

2Q20 Large Cap Value Equity Commentary

If one were to begin investing today with a multi year forward outlook, it seems difficult to imagine the growth index continuing its climb relative to the value index much longer. What may serve as the trigger is difficult to pinpoint, but unless growth index companies have reached a permanent new high in the markets, then it seems reasonable to think “value” may be recognized as an opportunity rather than a mistake.

2Q20 Large Cap Growth Equity Commentary

Markets rebounded in dramatic fashion during the 2nd quarter, with the Russell 1000 Growth Index up 27.84%. The combination of record fiscal stimulus and aggressive action from the Federal Reserve led investors to look through a continued pandemic, social unrest, and poor (but better than expected) economic data. With the Federal Government and Federal Reserve all but guaranteeing extraordinary economic support through this crisis; investors focused on 2021 and the return to growth.

By Sector

All sectors were positive during the quarter, reversing Q1 trends. Energy went from worst to first. After being the worst performing sector in Q1, the group led the way in Q2, up almost 41%. The first quarter's headwinds, COVID related demand destruction and a Saudi/Russia price war, largely abated allowing the group to rally. Consumer Discretionary stocks were the next best performing group, up 38% on a resilient US consumer. Retail stocks rebounded, with massive gains in online shopping players like Wayfair, Etsy, and Carvana (up 270%, 176%, 118% respectively). Of course, the largest online retailer, Amazon, rose 41.5% in Q2. At 6.6% of the Index; AMZN contributed almost half of the sector's total return. Information Technology stocks rose 33.6%, as the sector provided an ideal combination of growth and strong balance sheets. Investors continued to seek out strong growth within the sector despite climbing valuations. The software group's forward Price to Sales ratio rose from 5.7x to almost 9x during the second quarter.

By Factor

Factor performance was choppy during the quarter. There appeared to be a tug of war between value and growth stocks within the Russell 1000 Growth Index. Quantitative investors have been looking for a rotation into value factors which have underperformed for several years. While this quarter saw some bursts of value outperformance; we believe this was a function of the "economy re-opening trade" and not a shift of investors actively rotating into low valuation. Strong value performance bursts were also correlated with strong returns for equities with the highest leverage and highest trailing 1-month volatility (Airlines, Cruise Lines, Banks, Theme Parks). Ultimately, growth factors ended up winning in the quarter, ramping during the month of June while value/leverage/volatility sold off.

2Q20 Large Cap Growth Equity Commentary

Highland Large Cap Growth Performance

Large Cap Growth outperformed during the second quarter. In early April, we were able to aggressively rotate within our quantitative process, adding more active factor exposure to growth. The portfolio benefited from this increased exposure throughout the quarter. This shift included a larger weighting Information Technology, where we gained the most alpha throughout Q2. Software was source of strength, generating returns from both an overweight allocation and strong security selection within the model. Healthcare performed well, producing outperformance in Pharmaceuticals and Biotechnology. Health Care Equipment was a slight drag within the sector. The biggest source of underperformance was cash drag early in the quarter. Uncertain conditions and reduced visibility led us to hold slightly higher cash as dry powder. We corrected course mid-way in Q2, but the market's strong rebound made any amount of cash a performance net negative.

The Russell Rebalance

Hitting a Moving Target

Every year, the Russell Indices are rebalanced after the close of trading on the last Friday of June. This year was the one of the most dramatic growth index reconstitutions since inception in 1992. The top three security weightings (MSFT, AAPL, AMZN) now account for 28.6% of the Index. 173 securities were removed from the index and 72 new names were added. Net, the index went from 536 securities to 435, the lowest security since at least 1995. The index now contains zero exposure to Banks or Airlines. We did gain one whole utility company and are down to two energy names.

Of the 72 names added; most were smaller market cap additions in the Technology and Healthcare sectors. The average market cap of the new securities is ~$18B vs the Index average at ~$60B; with a 1Y forward Price to Sales Ratio of 16.4x vs the Index at 4.0x.

Outlook

The growth index is now at all-time highs in the face of unprecedented economic uncertainty. Virtually of the gains have come from valuation expansion. This combination provides limited visibility into future returns. On the other hand, federal and fiscal policy is extremely accommodative and will likely continue. Low interest rates and extraordinary monetary policy push valuations higher. The fact also remains that a large portion of the growth universe is benefitting from the pandemic and investment around cloud computing/work from home trends. When constructing the portfolio, we will continue to follow our discipline, but tilt our process to be more selective around stocks with extreme valuations.

2Q20 Fixed Income Portfolio Manager Commentary

The unprecedented stimulus provided by the Federal Reserve helped deliver stability in the bond market during the second quarter, a much-needed break from the chaos in March. The Federal Reserve is trying to keep credit flowing for all aspects of the economy including: small/large business, municipalities and households. The Federal Reserve's balance sheet has ballooned since March, increasing to over $7 trillion from about $4 trillion. Additionally, the Federal Reserve is contemplating new forms of "stimulus" such as targeting specific yields on Treasury securities (i.e. yield curve control). This type of stimulus has been used in Japan since late 2016 as a way to stimulate their economy. Many market forecasters believe the Federal Reserve will adopt a yield curve control policy later this year. In May, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York President John Williams said policy makers are "thinking very hard" about targeting specific yields on Treasury securities as a way of keeping borrowing cost low for the foreseeable future. We do not believe the Fed will implement negative interest rates, as that policy has been deemed somewhat ineffective to stimulate growth.

On June 10th, Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell held a press conference after the two-day meeting of the FOMC ended. The Fed left interest rates unchanged. However, they signaled to the market that short-term rates are projected to stay low until 2022. Along with the decision on rates, the Fed projects the US economy will shrink 6.5% in 2020 and grow by 5% in 2021. On June 16th, the Federal Reserve started buying bonds issued by companies including Toyota, Apple, and AT&T as part of its emergency lending program in response to the pandemic. Since the Federal Reserve attempted to unfreeze the credit markets in March, the spread (or additional yield) on investment grade debt has declined by approximately 60%. US corporations continue to benefit from exceptionally low rates within international markets. For example, the 10-year German Treasury equivalent yields -0.41%. Foreign investors looking for incremental yield have gravitated towards the US investment grade market to enhance income and the trade has been more advantageous with currency hedging costs declining. Outside of the corporate bond market, the Federal Reserve now owns more than $2 trillion in agency mortgage backed securities. In March, agency mortgage spreads traded at the widest level since the global financial crisis. Within just seven weeks (starting March 16th), the Fed purchased over $600 billion in mortgage securities bringing spreads back to reasonable levels. However, mortgage spreads are still wide by historical standards and offer value compared to the Treasury market. The Fed currently owns approximately 30% of the agency mortgage market and is projected to own 40% by the end of 2020. Companies insulated from the pandemic have been able to tap the bond market at historically low interest rates. For example, Amazon borrowed $10 billion in June at one of the cheapest ever borrowing costs. They issued three-year debt that yielded only 0.4%. This is in stark contrast to airlines/hotels/cruise lines who have been forced to raise cash in some instances above 10%. Corporations have already raised more than $1 trillion in 2020 doubling the pace in 2019.

2Q20 Fixed Income Portfolio Manager Commentary

Approximately 70% of the new issuance was brought to market in the nine weeks since the Fed announced it would support corporate bonds on March 23rd. The second quarter generated another positive rate of return for the bond market as interest rates remain close to historical lows. Treasuries are up 8.7% in 2020, generating the best first-half performance in the Bloomberg Barclays US Treasury index since 1995. The Bloomberg Barclays Aggregate increased 2.90% during the quarter bringing year-to-date performance to 6.14%. The Bloomberg Barclays Intermediate US Gov/Credit index increased 2.81% during the quarter bringing year-to-date performance to 5.28%. Benefiting from the actions of the Federal Reserve, risky credit assets outperformed during the quarter helping to offset the awful relative performance during the first quarter. For example, junk bonds appreciated 10.18% during the quarter which was the best three-month period since September 2009.

The Municipal bond market was up 2.72% during the quarter, which brings performance to positive levels for the year (+2.08%). Similar to the corporate bond market, investors were compensated for taking incremental risk this quarter. After a challenging first quarter, muni investor inflows have picked back up on possible higher levels of comfort surrounding the large state budget shortfalls. The Federal Reserve has also provided liquidity to the market via the Municipal Liquidity Facility. The Fed is attempting to ease borrowing pressures on state and local governments.

The driver of interest rates going forward will be a combination of several factors including (1) the containment of Covid-19 (2) the ongoing stimulus provided by the Federal Reserve (3) growth rebounding not only in the US, but also in Europe/Asia and (4) increased inflation expectations. Current inflation readings are below trend and well-off targeted levels of the Federal Reserve. We believe the Federal Reserve will continue to keep rates low until inflation is consistently approaching 2%. The US government has provided more than $3 trillion to stimulate the economy, interest rates are currently pricing in very little upside to economic growth in the foreseeable future. We believe investors should be cautious about potential surprises regarding growth/inflation that are not currently priced into the market.
